THE VERY BEST BARLEY

When it comes to creating something special we know that only the very best ingredients will do, that is why our whisky range will make use of the finest bere barley. A historic grain, it was first grown in neolithic times and has a rich association with our island home. Traditionally used for whisky production, it fell out of favour as larger, cheaper, faster growing grains were developed. Luckily for us, bere happens to be the traditional barley produced on our islands, and we are proud that our whisky range will take full advantage of this heritage grain as we look to support a new generation of crofters while producing some of Scotland's finest single malts.

You are, of course, welcome to visit your cask and we would be delighted to show you around our distillery, giving you an insight into the process behind the making of your whisky. For those who cannot visit, we will send you samples when your whisky reaches 4, 7 and 10 years old so that you can keep track of its progress. When you decide the time is right, we will bottle your whisky for you here at Nunton Steadings.
